

Sixty-two and Counting

With OA, it was love at first sight. Within weeks, I committed to work the Steps and was embraced by my kindred spirits. At long last, I was home.

I was also beginning to deal with the damages of childhood sexual abuse. Besides OA meetings and literature, I was waist-deep in therapy, flashbacks, and more pain than I knew existed. So I was understandably proud when my sixty-day chip took its place on my key chain.

Then the unexpected happened. I became overwhelmed. Deeper memories surfaced, pain multiplied, and I lost my precious abstinence and faith in my Higher Power.

Another thirty days passed as I struggled with anger, guilt, pain, and a sense of losing something irreplaceable. No matter how I tried, I couldn't get my abstinence back. I felt ashamed, but the continued love and acceptance of my sponsor and friends in OA brought me back to meetings again and again. It wasn't the same as when I was abstinent, but I knew it was where I needed to be.

Then it happened. I regained my abstinence. First for one day, then two. I wondered if I should take that precious chip off my key chain. The thought of starting from scratch was very depressing.

Suddenly I knew I wasn't starting from scratch. Even though I lost my abstinence, I still had recovery. Through those thirty dark days, I never left OA.

So once again I'm counting the days. I had sixty days of abstinence before I got off track so that's where I'm picking it up again: sixty-one, sixty-two, and still counting. It's so good to be back home.

— Lifeline, May 1991

Inspiration

I can be abstinent, but only with God's help. This miracle happened in my life, and it can happen in yours.

— Lifeline,
November 2006

A Call To Service

Anonymous says, "Intergroup has allowed me to give service without being an expert. It has taught me how to contribute meaningfully, and I am grateful to all of you for accepting my weaknesses."

How will you serve this week?

Want to read more?

Subscribe to e-Lifeline!

or

Already a subscriber? Pass
Lifeline Weekly on to OA friends and encourage them to subscribe!